Abstracts

Global malted food drinks market stood at about $ 9 billion in 2018 and is projected to grow at a CAGR of around 11% to reach $ 16.4 billion by 2024, on account of growing consumption of malted food drinks as nutrition supplements, especially for children and women and rising awareness regarding the various benefits of malted food drinks. Moreover, people across the globe are becoming more health conscious owing to changing lifestyle patterns which is further pushing demand for malt based food drinks globally. Additionally, growing trend of dual household income is resulting in increased disposable income which is further expected to drive the sale of discretionary food items like malted food drinks through 2024.

Asia-Pacific dominated global malted food drinks market in 2018 on account of rising awareness regarding healthy lifestyle in developing countries in the region. India dominates Asia-Pacific malted food drinks market owing to growing consumer preference for milk with dairy additives such as malt and growing organized retail & e-commerce sectors in the country. Moreover, increasing urbanization, changing consumer preferences and rising disposable income of the middle-class population is further anticipated to drive demand for malted food drinks in the country.
