Abstracts

The Practice Management Systems Market was valued at US$ 19.65 billion in 2024 and is projected to reach US$ 36.33 billion by 2031; it is expected to register a CAGR of 9.3% during 2025-2031.

The Middle East and Africa (MEA) are experiencing gradual growth in the Practice

Management Systems (PMS) market, supported by healthcare modernization efforts, government-driven digital health strategies, and increasing private sector investments. Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries-such as the UAE and Saudi Arabia-are leading regional adoption due to national health digitization programs aligned with broader economic diversification goals. In these markets, demand is growing for integrated, cloud-based PMS platforms that enhance workflow efficiency, reduce administrative burdens, and align with global data security and interoperability standards. In contrast, many African nations are still in early stages of PMS adoption, facing infrastructure limitations, budget constraints, and workforce training gaps. Nonetheless, international aid programs, mobile health initiatives, and the increasing penetration of smartphones are creating opportunities for web-based PMS platforms in underserved regions. MEA represents emerging potential for vendors offering adaptable, low-cost, and multilingual solutions.

The Practice Management System (PMS) market in Saudi Arabia is witnessing strong growth as the Kingdom accelerates healthcare transformation under its Vision 2030 initiative. The government's commitment to digitizing the healthcare sector-reflected in the National Transformation Program and the rollout of the Seha Virtual Hospital-has driven demand for integrated PMS platforms to enhance administrative efficiency, reduce wait times, and improve patient engagement. Increasing private sector participation, fueled by regulatory reforms and public-private partnership models, also encourages hospitals and polyclinics to invest in advanced PMS solutions. As the healthcare system shifts from reactive to preventive care, PMS systems that offer chronic disease management, telehealth integration, and patient tracking are in high demand. Additionally, Saudi Arabia's growing urban population, rising incidence of lifestyle diseases, and increased adoption of health insurance are pushing providers to streamline claims processing and revenue cycle management. The focus on creating a digital health ecosystem, supported by the Saudi Health Information Exchange (SHIE), accelerates the need for interoperable PMS platforms.
