Abstracts

Under the new leadership of President Joko Widodo, Indonesia is determined to tackle its many logistics bottlenecks in a bid to boost investment and economic growth. Ti's latest report examines what challenges policymakers must overcome, and what the potential gains are if they succeed.

'Indonesia Transport & Logistics 2015 – A New Dawn?' also offers unprecedented insight into the competitive environment for forwarders and logistics service providers operating in South East Asia's largest economy, including analysis of which companies are already major players and what barriers market entrants face. In addition, the report features in-depth analysis of the road, rail, sea and air sectors including Ti's exclusive market sizing and demand forecasts.

What are the top reasons to invest in Indonesia's logistics industry?

New government has pledged to tackle Indonesia's endemic corruption and chronic infrastructure deficit

Efforts towards simplifying domestic and international trade processes - making Indonesia a 'world maritime axis' between the Pacific and Indian Ocean

Emphasis on allowing more Foreign Direct Investment

ASEAN Economic Community launch will free up movement of people and goods across the bloc

Rapidly modernising retail, e-commerce and a growing automotive sector provide opportunities for contract logistics and express providers

'Indonesia Transport & Logistics 2015 - A New Dawn?' also examines:

What the ASEAN Economic Community means for Indonesia

What Indonesia has to gain from boosting its manufacturing base and international trade

Key benchmark logistics performance indicators

Detailed information on infrastructure by mode

Analysis of the political, economic, social, technological and legal environment in which transport providers operate
