About

Product Name: Pomegranate extract
Synonyms: Punica granatum extract
CAS#: 84961-57-9

Pomegranate extract (Latin name Punica granatum L.), is derived from the organically-grown fruit native to the regions from Iran through to north India. Pomegranate extract is primarily composed of alkaloids and polyphenols and has the formula $C_{14}H_{16}O_8$.

The polyphenolic content of pomegranate extract have historically stirred the greatest scientific interest. In particular, the formidable antioxidant capacity of their ellagitannin content has been credited with much of pomegranate's health-promoting power.

Recent analysis has further clarified pomegranate's mechanisms of action, principally in the area of beneficial gene expression $??$ " inhibiting pro-inflammatory nuclear factor-kappaB (NF-kB) and down-regulating production of cancer-stimulating androgen receptors in prostate cells. Pomegranate has also been found to play a unique role in upregulating expression of paraoxonase-1 (PON-1) $??$ " an enzyme required for artery-cleansing high-density lipoprotein (HDL) to function optimally.

Pomegranate's clinically validated cardioprotective effects have prompted some to label it the 'heart-healthy' juice. Its flavonoid content inhibits oxidative damage to low-density lipoprotein (LDL), helping to protect blood vessels against atherosclerosis.

Polyphenols and other components in pomegranate extract exert other health-beneficial effects. Numerous phytochemicals in pomegranate extract $??$ " ellagic acid in particular $??$ " have been shown to disrupt cancer development at multiple stages. Another polyphenol unique to pomegranate is punicalagin, which converts into molecules known to slow prostate cancer cell growth.

Pomegranate's antimicrobial potential has also been the focus of scientific research. Polyphenols contained in the extract inhibit the growth of a number of pathogenic bacteria, fungi, and parasites.

Worldwide, total pomegranate production amounts to around 2.1 thousand tonnes, of which India produces nearly 57%.
