Sodium fluorosilicate, also known as silicon sodium fluoride, disodium silicofluoride, destruxol applex, safsan, natriumhexafluorosilicat, etc., is a white odor-free and tasteless solid that is insoluble in water. Its molecular formula is F_6Na_2Si and molecular weight is 188.05. Sodium fluorosilicate is produced by reaction of fluorosilicic acid with sodium chloride or sodium sulfate.

The product is utilized as an additive for water fluoridation, ore refining, for opal glass raw material. Sodium fluorosilicate is widely used in the ceramics. It is employed as a repellent or feeding depressant for carpet beetles and clothes moths. Moreover, the product is used as a hygroscopic agent and solidifying agent. Sodium fluorosilicate also finds its application in drinking water treatment; artificial cryolite, sodium fluoride production and in the medical industry.

The product may cause irritation of eyes, eyes damage or even severe inflammation. Repeated exposure to eyes can lead to conjunctivitis and even loss of vision. Sodium fluorosilicate may produce mild but significant inflammation of the skin; skin dermatitis characterized by blistering, swelling and redness. Rash, burning, redness, ulcer formation are amid the symptoms following the contact of the product with the skin. Ingestion of sodium fluorosilicate can result in nausea, diarrhea, vomiting, salivation, abdominal pain, thirst, muscular weakness, etc. Inhalation of the product causes coughing, chest discomfort, sneezing, occupational asthma, pulmonary inflammation, irritation of nose and throat. Repeated or prolonged contact of sodium fluorosilicate may lead to diseases of the airways, cumulative health effects and nasal ulceration and/or perforation of the nasal septum.
