Abstracts

The container tracking and security market, which first started to sprout in 2000, is a relatively new market. Although the world has faced recession and some parts of the world continue to face crisis, world trade and container trade has grown exponentially since the 1990s. Container shipping may face a dip in the coming years, but this does not deter the fact that number of TEU has grown over years and will continue to grow. Visiongain has determined that that 2012 container tracking and security market is worth $620m.

World container traffic is dominated by Asia, whereas the tracking and security concerns are now focussed in North America, and to an extent in Europe. Following the 9/11 tragedy, shipping container security has always been a point of concern especially because a 40 ft container can accommodate, 30,000 kg of conventional high explosive material or even terrorists. Container tracking overlaps the concern of security in addition to better customer service, monitoring sensitive cargo, cargo thefts and tracking containers at ports for better management and high throughput of ports.
