About

March Foods, Ian Crosby

Visiongain sought opinion of Ian Crosby, National Account Manager at March Foods Ltd - one of the UK's leading private food contract manufacturers and packing businesses. The company has been accredited with a BRC (British Retail Consortium) Certificate and achieved Soil Association Accreditation for the production and packing of organic products. We interviewed Mr. Crosby in July 2013 and would like to thank him for his time.

Trends and Developments

Visiongain: What would you say are the key trends and developments on the Shelf Life Enhancement Technology market at the moment?

Ian Crosby: We are currently seeing two kinds of trends: one of them are food products with clean label and generally liquid clean label, where the only way we can achieve a good shelf life is with a PH control and obviously hot filling with a cooling option. This way, combined with a temperature and PH would mean a good shelf life. And the other option, we are currently looking into, is HPP – High Pressure Processing – that allows us to retain nutritional value of the product. So, we need to work on that at the moment.

Challenges and Opportunities

Visiongain: What challenges and opportunities are there in your view in Shelf Life Enhancement Technology market?

Ian Crosby: The biggest opportunity at the moment is sort of ambient clean label products. We see a large demand for that at the moment. And the biggest challenge is possibly to get a bit of a dairy into it, as an option, for the sort of child market: baby/ infant or infant/ toddler food market, because consumers are looking for that sort of product, with the dairy property in it, options with more calcium, etc. The processes, like UHT, generally reduce nutritional value of the product, that's where HPP comes in. We are currently looking at options with HPP.
