Abstracts

Although big data is not a new concept, it has emerged as a significant commercial success over the past few years. Visiongain calculates that over the next five years big data will play an increasingly important role in the business segment as future systems will further exploit the capabilities offered by this technology. Visiongain has determined that the value of the global big data market in 2013 will reach $12.4 billion.

One of the key driving points for big data services has been its applicability to all forms of organizations where some sort of data is being compiled and managed. While all of these organizations might not gain equally from the application of big data, some will thrive from it and others will see results with a lower impact. Nonetheless big data is here to stay and is already being adopted in many sectors including healthcare, communications, retail, transport, private and the public sector.

In recent years, as the IT world discovers new and innovative ways on how to systematically collect and harness the power of big data, there has been increasing debate regarding its ethical application, especially with the growing concerns for user privacy and users demanding full transparency from organizations from how their private data is being handled.

This issue has been highlighted with the recent revelation from the leaked documents of the Prism initiative of the National Security Agency (NSA) and its alleged linkages to gain access to user data from giant corporations using big data such as Facebook, Google, Apple and a few others. These companies could come under close scrutiny for the exploitation of their users private data if these claims are found to be true.

Big data is turning out to be a ubiquitous phenomenon which can effectively be applied a wide range of industries from the private to the public sector. The overall big data market is growing at a rapid pace and will continue to do so over the forecast period 2013-2018. Big data has become more of a buzzword recently and 80% of the enterprises in the developed world are now investing at least some part of their IT budget on big data.

What makes this report unique?

Visiongain consulted widely with industry experts and full transcripts from these exclusive interviews with IBM, Informatica, Jaspersoft and Terracotta/Software AG are included in the report. As such, our reports have a unique blend of primary and secondary sources providing informed analysis. This methodology allows insight into the key drivers and restraints behind market dynamics and competitive developments, as well as identifying the technological issues. The report therefore presents an ideal balance of qualitative analysis combined with extensive quantitative data including global, submarket and regional markets forecasts from 2013-2018 - all identifying strategic business opportunities.

About

Global Big Data Everything as a Service (XaaS) Submarket Forecast 2013-2018

XaaS may only represent a small segment of the global big data market but it is nonetheless growing. Visiongain calculates the XaaS submarket will be worth $0.9 billion globally in 2013. Visiongain calculates the CAGR for the period 2013-2018 to be 51.8%, with the market reaching $7.2 billion by 2018.

IBM Company Background and Involvement in Big Data Analytics

Visiongain: Please give us a little background about your company and your big data service offerings.

Chris Nott: IBM has technology and services offerings for big data. We have invested $16bn in acquiring big data and analytics technology companies over the past ten years and in original research and organic product development. This is to able to offer our clients a complete portfolio to meet their challenges and capitalise on their opportunities. Our services offerings span strategy, delivery and hosting. Overall IBM provides capability for 1) data and information foundation infrastructure, hardware and software, to manage and govern data; 2) analytics through tools and techniques; 3) analytics solutions which meet common business needs.

Key Trends & Recent Developments in the Big Data Market

Visiongain: What would you say are the key trends and recent developments in the big data market and why?

Chris Nott: We are seeing a continued shift in big data adoption from education and exploration to actual project implementations. Clients are identifying business opportunities which can be enabled by combining new data sources with existing data sources and more powerful analytics. For example, the digitisation of so much that is happening provide new types of large and real time data, much of which may be unstructured, analytical technologies and techniques are able to extract insight more quickly and accurately than before. Driving all of this is competition: in 2012, 63% of organisations said they were realising competitive advantage from information and analytics compared with 37% in 2010. CEOs are seeking to know there customers as individuals: improving customer-centric outcomes are the largest driver for big data.

Operational optimisation and risk/financial management are the next two largest drivers.
