Human Grade Dog Food Market Insights, 2025

The human grade dog food market is rapidly expanding as pet owners increasingly treat their animals as family members, demanding the same level of quality and safety in pet food as they expect in their own meals. Human grade certification, which ensures that food is manufactured in facilities that meet human food safety standards, appeals to discerning consumers wary of recalls and low-quality byproducts. Brands like The Farmer's Dog, Ollie, and Nom Nom Now are offering personalized meal plans using fresh meats, vegetables, and grains, delivered directly to homes in ready-to-serve formats. This shift aligns with broader trends in pet wellness and preventative veterinary care, where diet is seen as a cornerstone of longevity and vitality. Ingredient transparency, sustainability, and clean labeling are not just preferred—they are now expected in this premium pet food segment.
