Seasoning and Spices Market Insights, 2025

The seasoning and spices market is being driven by the ongoing home cooking boom, fueled by remote work culture and the rise of food exploration through global recipes. Consumers are increasingly venturing into international cuisines such as Thai, Ethiopian, or Korean, prompting higher demand for unique spice blends like berbere, gochugaru, and za'atar. Online platforms and subscription services like Spicewalla and Piquant Post are making it easier for home cooks to access authentic spices with instructions and recipe cards, further encouraging trial and repeat purchases. Additionally, the health halo surrounding certain spices such as turmeric, cumin, and ginger is amplifying their use beyond flavoring—spilling into teas, smoothies, and immunity boosters. The expansion of organic, non-GMO, and fair-trade certifications has also elevated consumer trust, with supermarkets and gourmet stores dedicating more shelf space to premium spice jars and refillable containers.
