EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The processed fruits market in Indonesia was equal to 252.00 million USD (calculated in retail prices) in 2014. Until 2024, the processed fruits market in Indonesia is forecast to reach 692.30 million USD (in retail prices), thus increasing at a CAGR of 6.34% per annum for the period 2019-2024. This is a decrease, compared to the growth of about 15.73% per year, registered in 2014-2018.

The average consumption per capita in value terms reached 0.99 USD per capita (in retail prices) in 2014. In the next five years, it grew at a CAGR of 14.30% per annum.

In the medium term (by 2024), the indicator is forecast to slow down its growth and increase at a CAGR of 5.37% per annum.

One of the most important factors is the urbanization of the population – more and more people are moving from rural areas to urban ones. All these trends tend towards a busier and more active lifestyle, in which the consumers do not have that much free time. Consequently, most of the people, nowadays, are more likely to eat snacks throughout the day, rather than eating three meals a day. At the same time, people are also looking for healthy varieties of snacking. Dried fruit has natural sugar, that is considered healthier, which is why the use of fruit as a replacement for sugar has been considerably growing. Meanwhile, dried fruit use in snacking is also gaining traction and companies are exploiting this trend by offering “snackable” dried fruit, nuts and seeds, most frequently in the form of bars. In addition, fruit-based snacking and bars are usually packaged into convenient individual items and are being redefined as somewhere between healthy and indulgent. What is more, canned and frozen fruit and vegetables are very convenient to use. They not only have a long shelf life, but can be also purchased in handy portion sizes. Thus, consumers are able to plan their meals effectively and reduce food waste.

As consumers are becoming increasingly aware of healthy eating, their food preference is changing towards nutritionally rich, high-quality and natural foods without questionable ingredients. Due to this, one of the main factors driving the purchase decisions has been quality. When it comes to food, people usually use their five senses to evaluate the quality of products, thus making quality attributes such as color, texture, flavor, and nutrient content increasingly important. In the fruits and vegetables processing industry companies aim to maximize all of the quality aspects, which is why they have started to invest in advanced processing technologies like high pressure processing, pulsed electric fields and microwaves. Traditional technology, including thermal processing, sterilization, and fermentation, usually relies on heat, which, however, affects the quality parameters of fruits and vegetables. Ultimately, heat can change color, texture and flavor of a product, as well as to reduce its nutrient content, making it highly unattractive for customers. Therefore, companies are actively using advanced technologies, thus being able to improve the nutrient content, as well as color flavor, and the texture of the processed fruits and vegetables. While high pressure processing is more frequently used for the production of high-quality juices and jams, pulsed electric field processing and microwave processing find application in the potato industry. Potato processors are using pulsed electric field processing to pre-treat their potatoes before frying, which reduces the oil uptake, resulting in lower-fat chips.
