Today, the specific raw materials, provenance, heritage and style are not only describing the dynamic spirit industry, but also create an emotional appeal and connect with the contemporary consumer. The consumers presently are more adventurous and curious than before. They seek new or relatively unknown, original products, incl. exotic flavors and are seriously interested in deepening their knowledge of alcoholic beverages, their history, tradition, varieties or ways of consumption. They prefer brands with genuine authenticity and quality. As an educated and curious generation, a popular trend among the millennials today is their interest in the products. For example, they want to know where the vodka comes from, what it is made from and how it is made. As a result, the transparency and trustworthiness are especially important for the contemporary vodka consumers. Presently, they appreciate brands which differentiate with their own story and unique characteristics. They seek for outstanding brands and products with high quality and credibility. According to industry professionals, the vodka is no longer without distinctive character, aroma, taste or color.
