EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The soups and broths market in North East Asia was equal to 1.91 billion USD (calculated in retail prices) in 2014. Until 2024, the soups and broths market in North East Asia is forecast to reach 2.64 billion USD (in retail prices), thus increasing at a CAGR of 2.56% per annum for the period 2019-2024. This is a decrease, compared to the growth of about 3.87% per year, registered in 2014-2018.

The average consumption per capita in value terms reached 5.08 USD per capita (in retail prices) in 2014. In the next five years, it grew at a CAGR of 3.88% per annum.

In the medium term (by 2024), the indicator is forecast to slow down its growth and increase at a CAGR of 2.53% per annum.

When it comes to soups and broths, people, typically, do not consider them to be a full meal. In fact, most of them perceive soups and broths as an appetizer or a snack. In order to stimulate consumption, companies have been focused on the creation of more sophisticated flavors in addition to traditional pairings. Some of the most popular developments include Asian-inspired dishes. For instance, the traditional Vietnamese soup called pho, which is a beef noodle soup is one of the latest ethnic foods, which has been growing more popular as a healthy source of snacking. Companies have been also adding pine nuts, walnuts and various seeds, not only for better visual appeal, but also to create a crunchy texture of the soups and broths. In a similar way, the use of non-traditional meats such as bison in soups and broths is also gaining traction. As with other food categories, dry soup producers are also putting more attention on new launches with health claims such as low sugar, low sodium or 100% natural ingredients. Furthermore, creamy soups and broths have been also high in demand in the last few years, especially various bisques. Various vegetables including roasted cauliflower, broccoli, mushroom, zucchini, pumpkin and any other vegetable, which can be pureed, have been common ingredients in many soup options.

Younger generations who are increasingly health-conscious have been avoiding shelf-stable soups and broths, due to the common perception that they include high amount of sodium and artificial ingredients. Particularly millennials have become more aware and mindful of where their food comes from and how it is made. They are looking for more fresh, wholesome, and natural ingredients. In order to meet the fast-changing consumer tastes and preferences manufacturers have been investing in new product development. They have been engaged in the development of minimally processed, better-for-you products with no artificial ingredients and lower sodium content. In line with this trend, demand for natural and organic soups and broths has been also rising, driving the growth of the overall convenience food industry. Organic broth and bouillon, in particular, have been performing pretty well, mainly owing to the increasing attention towards cooking at home and desire for more flavor of the dishes.
